There once was a cat from Peru,
Whose fur was a bright shade of blue.
She'd dance on her toes,
In ribbons and bows,
And sing songs that made hearts anew.

In a garden, there lived a wise owl,
With feathers as soft as a towel.
He'd hoot in the night,
By the pale moonlight,
And teach all the creatures to prowl.

There was a young mouse in a house,
Who'd scurry as quiet as a mouse.
With cheese in his sight,
He'd sneak in the night,
And nibble away, oh so douse!

A little boy named Timmy,
Had a frog who was awfully slimy.
With a leap and a hop,
It'd jump and then stop,
And croak tunes that sounded quite hymny.

There once was a fish in a bowl,
Who dreamed of the sea, vast and whole.
With scales so bright,
It'd swim with delight,
And make friends with a joyful soul.

In a forest, there lived a bear,
With a growl that would cause quite a scare.
But deep in his den,
He was gentle, my friend,
And loved to give hugs, so rare.

There was a young duck on a lake,
Who loved to make friends for the sake
Of splashing and quacking,
And sometimes just napping,
With feathers as bright as a cake.

A little girl named Jane,
Had a pony with a long, flowing mane.
With a trot and a prance,
It'd dance and it'd dance,
And gallop across the wide plain.

There once was a snail on a wall,
Who liked to take things slow, not at all.
With a trail of slime,
It'd climb and it'd climb,
And peek over the edge, feeling tall.

 In a barnyard, there lived a chick,
Who learned to peck seeds pretty quick.
With a cluck and a flap,
It'd nap in a lap,
And dream of a life so slick.

There was a young lamb in a meadow,
With fleece as white as fresh snow.
With a baa and a bleat,
It'd follow its feet,
And frolic wherever it'd go.

A little boy named Jake,
Had a frog that loved to partake
In games by the creek,
With a leap and a squeak,
They'd race to the pond, no mistake.

There was a young rabbit so fluffy,
Whose fur was incredibly scruffy.
With hops and with bounces,
In fields full of trounces,
It'd munch on carrots so stuffy.

In a castle, there lived a king,
Who loved to dance and to sing.
With a crown on his head,
And a robe that was red,
He'd rule with a fair and kind wing.

There once was a cat in a hat,
Who chased after mice like a brat.
With a swat and a pounce,
He'd hunt them by ounce,
And nap in the sun after that.

A little girl named Lily,
Had a friend who was rather silly.
A talking blue jay,
Who'd chat the whole day,
And make her laugh willy-nilly.

There was a young owl in a tree,
With big eyes that could hardly see.
He'd hoot at night,
By the moon's soft light,
And dance in the wind, wild and free.

In a garden full of bright flowers,
Lived a bee with incredible powers.
He buzzed and he hummed,
All day he would come,
Collecting sweet nectar for hours.

There was a young girl with a kite,
That flew up so high out of sight.
With a string in her hand,
She'd make it grand,
And watch as it danced in the light.

A little boy named Max,
Had a dragon with scales like tacks.
It breathed out fire,
And soared ever higher,
With wings that could lift heavy sacks.

There once was a bear in a cave,
Who thought he was terribly brave.
With a growl and a roar,
He'd explore more and more,
And never did once misbehave.

There was a young goat in a field,
Who'd eat anything that was peeled.
With a bleat and a chew,
It'd munch and it'd moo,
And wander wherever revealed.

In a pond, there lived a frog,
Who loved to sit on a log.
With a croak and a leap,
It'd catch bugs in a sweep,
And nap in the sun like a dog.

There was a young pup named Rover,
Who'd fetch sticks and balls over and over.
With a bark and a wag,
He'd fetch like a stag,
And roll in the clover, oh so clever!

A little girl named Susie,
Had a turtle who was slow and snoozy.
With a shell on its back,
It'd move with a knock,
And munch on lettuce, so choosy.

There was a young bird in a nest,
With feathers of orange and the rest.
It chirped and it sang,
Its sweet melody rang,
And soared in the sky with zest.

In a treehouse, there lived a squirrel,
With a tail that would twirl and swirl.
It'd scamper and hop,
And never once stop,
Collecting nuts in its tiny world.

There once was a cat named Whiskers,
Who loved to explore, oh what risks hers!
With a purr and a meow,
She'd wander and plow,
Through bushes and trees, quite brisk hers.

A little boy named Jack,
Had a turtle who liked to unpack.
With a slow and steady pace,
It'd explore every space,
And nap under the sun, on a sack.

There was a young fox in a den,
With fur as red as a pen.
It'd hunt in the night,
With all of its might,
And snuggle with kits in the glen.

In a meadow, there lived a bee,
With stripes as bright as can be.
It'd buzz to and fro,
Wherever it'd go,
Collecting pollen, oh so free.

There was a young horse on a farm,
With a mane that would cause quite a charm.
It'd gallop and trot,
In the field, it would plot,
And graze on the grass with no harm.

A little girl named Rose,
Had a garden where everything grows.
With a shovel in hand,
She'd plant in the land,
And watch as her garden just flows.

There was a young pig on a farm,
With a snout that was quite the alarm.
It'd oink and it'd snuffle,
Through mud it would shuffle,
And roll in the dirt with great charm.

In a forest, there lived a deer,
With antlers that sparkled so clear.
It'd prance and it'd bound,
In the woods it would sound,
And graze on the grass without fear.

There once was a dog named Blue,
Whose fur was a wonderful hue.
He chased his own tail,
Without fail, without fail,
And never quite caught it, it's true.

A little boy named Sam,
Had a bear for a friend, not a lamb.
With a roar and a growl,
It'd play and then prowl,
And snuggle with Sam in a jam.

There was a young bee in a hive,
Who worked from early till five.
With pollen on its knees,
It'd buzz in the breeze,
And make honey that made folks feel alive.

In a pond, there swam a duck,
Who thought he was terribly stuck.
With a flap and a quack,
He'd swim and he'd slack,
And paddle about with some luck.

There was a young girl with a kite,
That flew up so high out of sight.
With a string in her hand,
She'd make it grand,
And watch as it danced in the light.

A little boy named Ben,
Had a frog for a friend, oh so zen.
They'd hop and they'd play,
All through the long day,
And then nap in the shade by the glen.

There once was a snail on a leaf,
Whose journey was rather brief.
With a slime trail behind,
He'd slowly unwind,
And munch on a small piece of beef

In a treehouse lived a young elf,
Who liked to bake cookies himself.
With flour and dough,
He'd mix to and fro,
And share them with friends on the shelf.

There was a young whale in the sea,
Who loved to swim wild and free.
With a leap and a splash,
He'd make a big dash,
And sing with his heart full of glee.

A little girl named Kate,
Had a kite that just wouldn't wait.
It soared in the breeze,
Above the tall trees,
And danced in the sky, so great.

There once was a frog in a pond,
Who thought he was terribly fond
Of swimming all day,
In the water, he'd play,
And leap with a joyful respond.

In a castle lived a brave knight,
Who loved to put on a great fight.
With a sword in his hand,
He'd defend his land,
And protect it with all of his might.

There was a young bear in the wood,
Who loved to eat berries so good.
With a munch and a crunch,
He'd eat a whole bunch,
And then nap in the shade as he should.

There once was a mouse in a house,
Who was quieter than even a mouse.
With a squeak so slight,
He'd scurry at night,
And hide from the cat in the blouse.
